was of fair size and its applause was of the kind that betokens real enjoyment.

Mr. Zimbalist's art is ripening slowly and normally along the lines which were indicated by his first performances here. That he will presently occupy a commanding position in the world of music is beyond question. That he is already a player of large personal force is indisputable. The question of technical equipment need not be raised, because the possession of the means for sectioning his ends was long ago demonstrated by this violinist.
